ELIZABETH CLARISSA YANCEY
Daughter of Layton and Fanny Lewis Yancey

Elizabeth Clarissa Yancey, remembered as "Cissy", which is the way she signed her marriage bond, was a very capable person. Though only fifteen, when her sister Fanny married Will Price and moved to Stanardsville, Clarissa took Fanny's place, assisting her mother with the management of the household and care of the servants. So, when she married William Rodes she was well prepared to become the mistress of "Midway" the Rodes estate. No doubt she had met William while visiting her sister Fanny. Even in those days the distance between "Midway" and Stanardsville, was not considered great.

The Rodes of Albemarle County, Virginia are descendants of Sir Francis Rodes of Barlborough Hall, in Derbyshire, England. William Rodes, the son of Capt. John and Francina Brown Rodes, served as sheriff, of Albemarle County and was also a member of the Court. (95) His mother, Francina, was a daughter of Bernard and Elizabeth Dabney Brown of Brown's Cove, White Hall, Virginia. Her grandfather commanded Dabney's Legion at Yorktown. And, her great-great-grandmother, the wife of Cornelius Dabney, the immigrant, was the daughter of Charles Jennings, brother of William Jennings, the wealthy bachelor whose estate in England caused so much publicity and litigation.

The story is told, that when Thomas Jefferson, then governor of Virginia, heard that the British were approaching "Monticello", he sent for Bernard Brown, and entrusted to him important papers brought to "Monticello" for safe keeping. (96) Mr. Brown loaded them onto a wagon and with the aid of a trusted mountain-eer stored them in Brown's Cove. Soldiers used this road past the Cove but the papers were untouched until it was safe to return them to their proper place.

The Rodes plantation is situated just about half way between Brown's Cove and Charlottesville, on the original grant to John Rodes of St. Martin's Parish, Louisa County about 1748.

Mrs. Ruth Lynn Rodes Culpeper, the last member of the Rodes family to be born at "Midway" grew up with a rare love and appreciation of the old home, augmented by the cherished memories of her father and uncle. They spent many happy hours reminiscing about the stories of "Midway" told to them by their elders. All of which Ruth Lynn seems to have recorded mentally. Who then could be better qualified than she to describe "Midway" and how it developed?

She says that the present house is among the oldest dwellings in northern Albemarle County. On the brick chimney of the west wing the date 1765 is recorded. A large two story log house preceded the west wing. Three firings of handmade brick of Albemarle red clay were made, before the desired color and texture were obtained. The first was used for foundation and brick paved English basement. The house was completed with logs. It is believed to have been the first two-story building in the area. The second firing served to build walks and garden walls. The next firing was found to be desirable for use in the main dwelling, and its dependencies.

When the original, or west wing was completed, the kitchen was built nearby along a garden wall. The ceiling was high, the room large and the walk-in fireplace measured six by seven feet. Here all meals were prepared and taken to the main house ready to serve. The cook lived above the kitchen. Next to it the loom house was of the same plan. In it wool was carded, flax retted, and cotton, linen and wool woven into cloth to be made into clothing and house furnishings. After the Civil War only the foundation remained. The ice-house may have met the same fate, for it is of frame. But the brick smoke-house survived. There was also the rope walk, of brick and very straight, where all needed rope was made. A large wooden T, with a hook at either end of the crossbar was the starting point. A man with a collection of hemp stems, tucked under his belt, would loop one over each hook and start twisting, just like spinning yarn on a spinning-wheel. When the two strands met he twisted them together and started walking backwards, feeding in more hemp as needed.

In 1807 the east wing was built, a short distance from the original or west wing. Later, the space between the two was enclosed to form a hall and combine the two wings. Then five chimneys served ten working fireplaces. Several men were kept busy just tending the fires, an enviable job in winter.

In the original wing, all woodwork; doors, mantels, cornices and dados are of dense heart pine. All construction is pegged, including the dados, made of single boards twenty-nine inches wide. Rooms are large and ceilings ten feet high. Broad steps lead to the front porch where one can see the sharp pegs extending several inches below the heavy hand-hewn timbers which they secure. The white columns supporting the long second story porch, the stepped gables, and the shadows caste by the standing seams of a metal roof, all add charm to the beautiful old place.

An editorial in The Daily Progress of Charlottesville, Virginia on August 8, 1971 referred to "Midway" as an outstanding example of "Federal" or "Early Republic" architecture. Francis Duke, heading a movement to preserve the "Early Republic" architecture, in Charlottesville and Albemarle County describes it as "simple, human and honest but not monotonous, with something of the universality of art."

This was "Midway" before Clarissa went there, as a bride, and it changed little through the years. Will and Clarissa Rodes had seven children; Mary Frances, Elizabeth, Adeline, Francina, Marie, Thomas and John. One story of Clarissa's quick response is an unusual account of her battle with a bald eagle. Alarmed by screams of her children playing in the yard, she was horrified to see a bald eagle drop down in their midst. Eagles were numerous in Virginia those days and plagued the farmers by carrying off lambs, for food. So, why not a child?

With no thought for her own safety, Clarissa dashed out and threw her apron over the eagle's head blinding it. No mention of her weapon is recalled. It was probably the hoe generally kept by the door, for dealing with intruding snakes. She must have stayed behind her adversary, for with a powerful wing spread of approximately eight feet, and claws known to tear a human to shreds, it was essential to remain out of reach. Finally, she was victorious and the eagle lay dying.

William Rodes, her husband is sometimes, referred to as William Harris Rodes but in family records there is no middle name.

Mary Frances often visited, her mother's sister, whom she sometimes called Aunt Fanny or occasionally Aunt Price. While in Stanardsville she met a medical student from Harrisonburg who was there with friends. Neither ever forgot that meeting. Soon their visits became more frequent. Keeping in touch by mail was difficult. Regular mail service had not been established. Letters had to be carried by friends traveling that way or sent by the "crop mail" a term observed only in their letters. It may have referred to wagon loads of produce for eastern markets, which carried mail to points along their route.

Clarissa and her husband were not at all pleased with Mary Frances' devotion to Mr. Harrison, who admitted his play-boy inclinations but vowed that Mary Frances had changed his whole outlook on life. Only after she insisted that only with him could she ever be happy, did they reluctantly consent to their marriage.

Dr. Peachy Harrison, his father lived on Graham St. near Court Square, though the property also ran along German St. (now Liberty) and W. Market. He was the son of Benjamin Harrison and had grown up in the old house on the outskirts of Dayton, Virginia, referred to as the Harrison homestead. Built during the period when Indians were a threat, it had served as a fortress against them. Surrounded by pallisades it also had an underground passage to the nearby stream, for water. What an ideal place for grandson Peachy and his brother Gessner Harrison to play.

Dr. Harrison had attended Rush Medical School in Philadelphia which explains the source of his son's, middle name. When his father died in April of 1848, Dr. Peachy Rush Harrison took over his practice. In June of that same year he and Mary Frances Rodes were married and made their home with his mother, the former Mary Stuart.

A visit to "Midway" could be made by way of Stanardsville or Staunton. One route required two days, the other one. Dr. Harrison or one of her brothers or a close friend always accompanied Mary Frances. It was a lonely ride or drive, not safe for her to undertake alone. Sometimes returning through Stanardsville, after crossing the mountain they would spend a night at "Uncle Will's", on the Shenandoah River below Conrad's Store, now Elkton. Clarissa Yancey Rodes and Col. William Burbridge Yancey were sister and brother. His daughter Diana and Mary Frances were always eager for a chance to visit. The drive from "River Bank" to Harrisonburg could be completed the following day.

One year when Mary Frances and the children were visiting at "Midway" Minnie developed a severe cold.

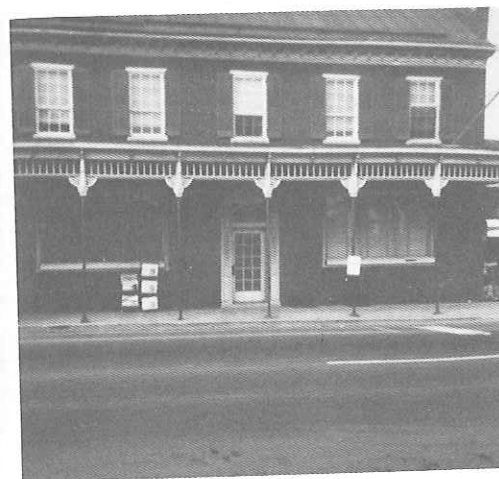

Writing to Dr. Harrison, Mary Frances said, "I wakened and, found Minnie a good deal exposed, and breathing heavily, I thought. I got up and had a fire made and called Ma and we bound Spts. of turpentine and oil on her throat, and gave her syrup, and having no carrot tea, I washed her throat with vinegar and pepper." This proved to be the beginning of a long illness. In another letter referring to Minnie, Mary Frances writes, "I had hoped to have a better report to send to you this morning of our little darling, than I have. She is, I suppose, better than when you left but still far from being well. Her gums are still very sore ... I am washing them with kreosote and using borax and loaf sugar between the washings as you directed. Do you think I had better try myrrh? I think you said something about it before you left. Her hoariness continues too. At times she is very hoarse and has a troublesome cough. I've been giving her H syrup, and washing her throat with nitrate of silver you left, and keep her throat rubbed with spirits of turpentine and camphor and oil and well bound with flannel ... I'm thinking of bathing her tonight and applying a weak mustard plaster to her breast." Minnie recovered.

Their two little girls, Minnie and Lucy were quite small when Dr. Harrison died, and Mary Frances returned with them to "Midway". Mary Lynn (Minnie) was sent to a private school in Farmville, where she showed unusual ability. Later she was tutored by Dr. Francis H. Smith, the husband of a cousin, who taught at the University.

In 1867 Mary Frances and the girls took the Stage Coach to New Market. It went through Ivy, Crozet Staunton and Harrisonburg, where it probably stopped to change horses at Brockett's Stage Coach stop, replaced now by Lindsey's Funeral Home on south Main St.

In New Market, they visited Mary Frances' sister Francina and her husband, Dr. Joseph Beveridge Strayer who lived in the house built by Dr. Strayer's father, a merchant. It is a large red brick building in which the street floor was, originally, the store, with commodious living quarters on the second floor. A handsomely carved doorway marked the entrance. In more recent years the building has been known as The Battlefield Inn and as The Lee-Jackson Hotel. During the Civil War Dr. Strayer converted the store area into a hospital.

While visiting Francina, Mary Frances became interested in the Seminary at the corner of Congress St. and Seminary Lane. Finally, she rented it for five years at forty dollars a year. She was the Principal and Mary Lynn who had recently graduated from Powell's famous school in Richmond, assisted with the teaching. In 1899 after the death of their mother Lucy took over the Seminary. Mary Lynn gave up teaching when she married Mathew White Williamson.

He was a member of the Williamson family of "Hardscrabble" built by Mathew's father Jacob d'Grot Williamson, a Huguenot, who settled two miles south of New Market, on the Three Notched Road as the Indians then called it.

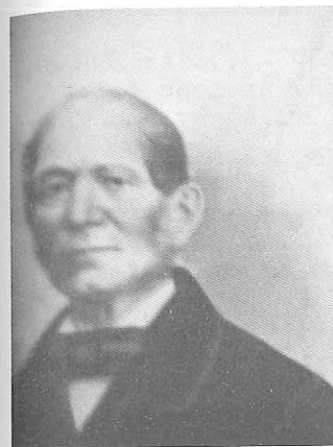

After two years at V.M.I. Mathew joined the Confederate Army, and served under Stuart and Lee. Following the war he spent several years in Texas before returning to New Market to settle down. He served as mayor for many years, and was frequently referred to as Squire Williamson. He and Mary Lynn had four children. Their son Rush Harrison Williamson was Assistant Attorney General under President Woodrow Wilson. Daughter Mary Lynn Williamson was Dean of Hollins College.

When war broke out between the states, John William Rodes, brother of Francina and Mary Frances, with three years of medicine at the University of Virginia, became 1st Lt. Col. 7th Reg. Va. Vol.. He married Clotilda Jarman of Brown's Cove, White Hall, whose brother Miletus Miller Jarman married Elizabeth Taliaferro, granddaughter of John's uncle, Charles Lewis Yancey.

Edward Thomas Rodes, son of John and Clotilda, was a mechanical engineer at the Newport News Ship Building Corp. when his father's illness made it necessary for him to return to Albemarle and assume management of "Midway". His was the last Rodes family to enjoy it.

Will and Clarissa Rodes were fortunate in living to enjoy not only their own children but grand-children and some great-grand-children. Clarissa lived only eight months after the death of her husband. Her health had failed and one evening as she visited with daughter Francina, son John, and grandson Edward Thomas Rodes, she closed her eyes for the last time.
